From Their Royal Majesties

Greetings Caid,

We've just gotten back from a wonderful Consorts Champion tournament! To start, the Earl Marshal and the Chivalry rolled out their new standard operating procedure and tournament format at this event; to Our elation, it worked wonderfully! There were no issues on the tournament field and the few questions that arose were handled via Sir Davin's new system promoting conversation and it worked with flying colors!

The day was glorious and We have the great honor of giving Our congratulations to Her Royal Majesty's Armored and Rapier Champions, Sir Valentine Martyn and Master Konrad Faust Tyndell! Both put on an awe-inspiring performance against two highly skilled opponents and were able to emerge victorious in some of the finest displays of swordsmanship and gallantry seen in the Knowne World!

We have yet, as of writing, had the honor of meeting this year's Unbelted winner; however, We have a feeling this tournament will indeed be a high-octane, action-packed event with many displays of great valor! Thank you all for reading this month's article and We cannot wait to see you at the next event!

Beorn's Curio Corner:

Wait, THAT'S period? Part Two of...

By Baron Beorn of the Northern Sea, OL

Good day to you fellow Caidans! How about these crazy spring days, am I right? By the time some of you read this, we will have new Heirs, and a select few of us ("we happy few" ¹) will have braved the desert wastes, and the largest river in North America ², to attend the "friendliest of all wars" - Gulf Wars! When last we left our intrepid adventurers, we were grooving on a plant that we may have, at some point, been told was not period to the SCA's era(s) of pursuit: the sweet potato. Well, now we are going to dig up the cousin of our first guest, and delve into the pre-17th century writing about that "other" tuber, the generic potato.

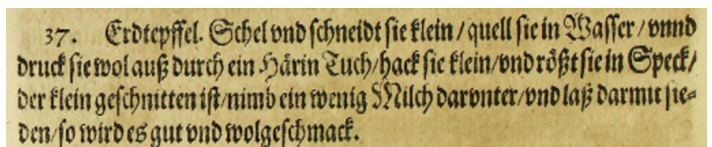

Solanum tuberosum (my Latin isn't the best, hence, my translation of this as "a Nightshade's Tummy" may be less than accurate), or the Potato, is a root vegetable native to the Americas. Domestication of these, we believe, first occurred in the area in South America now consisting of the border between southeastern Peru and northwestern Bolivia and can be traced back as far as 10,000 years ago! The cultivation seems to predate sweet potatoes by at least 5,000 years, and may have been some of the earliest plants harnessed by people in the western hemisphere.

Originally, sweet potatoes were THE 'potatoes' or sometimes called 'common potatoes' and the above were referred to by Gerard as 'bastard potatoes' or 'Virginia potatoes'; mistakenly believing these to have originated in North America. As a matter of fact, mistakes abound in the dissemination of potatoes (and tomatoes, peppers, and eggplants, but those are future articles³) all throughout Africa, Asia, and, you guessed it, Europe. While it IS true that these plants, including the potato, are members of the Nightshade Family, so are about 2700 other flowers, herbs, vines, spices and trees.

There was (and maybe still is) a saying that is something along the lines of "ignorance is no excuse," and if that is the case now, the distribution of the potato in Europe seems to demonstrate that it was not always the case. We see the first instance of potatoes on a shipping manifest on the Canary Islands in 1567. The earliest Spanish sources liken the smaller, what we would now call 'fingerling' potatoes to roasted chestnuts in consistency. Spanish raiders⁴ noticed that sailors who ate potatoes didn't suffer from scurvy, and recommended them as foodstuffs for ocean voyages. They called them 'tartuffo' and thought they were some kind of truffle. There is even ignorance as to just how potatoes got to Ireland in the first place. The earliest possible introduction is in either 1588 or 1589 and regardless which story is true (the former certainly apocryphal; the latter, just sad) it was rather tragic. In the first instance, potatoes were among the items washed ashore from the Irish Sea when the Spanish Armada was dashed to bits in an Atlantic storm. In the second instance, Sir Walter Raleigh planted them at his estates in County Cork, and had a banquet for Elizabeth I where the cooks, unaccustomed to preparing the tubers, threw away the "lumpy bits" and stewed the leaves and stems for the assembled guests. The greens contain a glycoalkaloid toxin called solanine which causes cramps, vomiting and diarrhea. The potato was, henceforth, banned from court.

And here we are; Spanish sailors eat them, yet British royals do not. How on earth did they end up getting printed in a German cookbook? First, we have to ask, is this recipe really about potatoes? Well, the modern German word for potato is Kartoffel and has the same root as the Italian/Spanish term for truffle (we just read about that!). However, in southern Germany and Austria, the term for potato is Erdapfel and literally means "earth apple." This could mean any vegetable or fruit that grew in or on the ground, including most gourds like pumpkins, melons, or squash. Depending upon who you choose to believe, either Marx Rumpolt's 1581 culinary textbook Ein new Kochbuch contains the first recipe, or, it didn't show up in German cuisine until the reign of Ferdinand III in the first third of the 17th century. How do we know for certain? Well, we don't, but based upon the recipe, we can make an educated guess. First thing's first, a facsimile of the recipe itself from the 1604 edition, and then we break it down and see for ourselves. Sound fun?

37. Erdtepfel. Schel vnd schneidt sie klein / quell sie in Wasser / vndnd druck sie wol auß durch ein Härin Tuch / hack sie klein / vndnd röst sie in Speck / der klein geschmitten ist / nimb ein wenig Milch darvnter / vndnd laß darmit sieden / so wird es gut vndnd wolgeschmack.

Beorn's Curio Corner:

Wait, THAT'S period? Part Two of... Cont'd

hack sie klein / vnd rößt sie in Speck / der klein geschnitten ist / nimb ein wenig Milch darvnter / vnd laß darmit seiden / so wirt es gut vnd wohlgeschmack.

37. Earth Apples. Peel and cut them small / cook them in Water / and squeeze it well through a hair cloth / chop them small / and roast it with bacon / that small sliced is / take underneath a little Milk / and let it cook together / so it will be good and pleasant tasting.

Full disclosure, I have cooked this very recipe before. For a Coronation feast no less. And yes, I did make a vegan option with roasted shallots and olive oil to replace the bacon and bacon grease, and almond milk instead of cow's milk. I am not a vegetarian, and as such I prefer the "leaded" option⁵ but it was certainly palatable either way (why would I serve something NOT edible?).

Now, what else COULD it be if not potatoes? A gourd perhaps? Unlikely, since they are also not native to Germany. Most are from the Americas, with a few cultivated in Africa and Asia.

Perhaps the Earthnut Pea, a pretty flower used for perfumes that has small, but edible tubers and is common to that part of Europe. The amount required to make a dish of any size also makes that a possibility, but only a little more likely.

Therefore, we are left with making the logical leap of white potatoes. Not russets or Irish reds or Yukon golds, but a type that we would now consider to be an heirloom type. It IS possible. After all, Marx Rumpolt was the head chef for the Archbishop and Elector of Mainz. Such a position would have access to all the newest things from the westward expansion. His employer was often prone to giving parties where Protestants and Catholics would mingle and attempt to iron out their differences. And, as Elector, the principal interests were not those of faith, but those of the German state (such as it was). How nice is fried potatoes with bacon as an ice-breaker? Thank you Marx for giving us such a glorious dish! Next month we are going to do a little April Fools; see you then!

1 - How can we talk about a war and not mention Bill Shakespeare? And, in truth, while Gulf Wars is almost universally beloved in the SCA, its historically close timing to Estrella just a month prior has meant few folks on the West Coast having enough time off of work to go to both. Even merchants generally pick one or the other (due to location, or having enough product, or just cost).

2 - And before anyone gives me that whole "the Missouri River is bigger than the Mississippi River" argument, let me just nip that in the bud right now. First, Missouri is two whole kilometers longer, but it has half the watershed, one ninth the flow of water, and half the width at its widest point. Second, the Mississippi water drainage basin is, essentially, most of the middle of the United States. Not trying to river shame; I mean, where would we be without the Colorado River?

3 - Why stop at one article? We'll need to fill this fine publication when event notices are a little thin, so... might as well be entertaining!

4 - 'Raiders' seems a bit nicer than genocidal, raping, murdering, warmongers. Shorter too.

5 - Since all petrol is unleaded now, I am most definitely showing my age with the 'leaded' comment, but what the heck?

The full text of the Acceptances, Pends, and Returns portion of the letter can be found online at <https://heraldry.sca.org/loar/2022/11/22-11lar.html>, and contains details about what was considered for many of these submissions.

Also - this month's Cover Letter (found at <https://heraldry.sca.org/loar/2022/11/22-11cl.html>) details a number of changes being made to the rules for heraldry in the SCA, as part of the continuing broadening of scope. It's well worth the read.

As always, please feel free to ask questions and I'll do my best to find answers for you!

Deputy Submissions Herald

From the Kingdom Chronicler

Greetings, Caid!

I hope that you found last month's article on the event submission process useful. I hope to have a similar article and process document available on how to cancel and/or reschedule events in next month's issue of "The Crown Prints." As always, thank you to all event stewards for sending in their event announcements in a timely manner so we can get this newsletter out on time.

Thanks also to Master Beorn and Lord Seamus, deputy submissions herald, for their articles this month that helped fill in our pages. As always, if you have content or art you would like to have featured in "The Crown Prints" (space permitting), please email me at chronicler.officer@sca-caid.org.

Until next month, I remain...

Yours in Service,

Baroness Briana MacCabe
