Early French Cookery

Sources, History, Original Recipes and Modern Adaptations

D. Eleanor Scully and Terence Scully with illustrations by J. David Scully

One of the most prolific and well-respected authors in the food history arena is Dr. Terence Scully. This month in Eat This Book we will explore his book, authored and illustrated with his wife and son, “Early French Cookery: Sources, history, Original Recipes and Modern Adaptations” By Terence Scully, D. Eleanor Scully with illuminations by J. David Scully published by The University of Michigan Press, originally published in 1995, second edition published by the University of Toronto Press in 2002.

“Early French Cookery” consists of an extensive Introduction, Ten Chapters, full of translated original recipes with the Scully’s redactions, a section on Menu suggestions and meals, as well as an appendix and an index. The authors have not included a bibliography, but most of their other works include extensive ones and although this is often one of my go/no-go decisions on a book the lack of bibliography in this compendium should not create any hesitation. The work is based on extensive historical research. The great news is that as a cook of any skill level you can pick up this book and cook from it immediately. The many black and white illustrations in the book, drawn by J. David Scully, are done in a Medieval manuscript illumination style and add a bit of whimsy to this information dense, and delicious book.

The first 50 pages of “Early French Cookery” are made up of the very comprehensive Introduction which includes eight separate sections. The first section of the introduction is titled “Early French Cookery” and it speaks to the culinary traditions from Apicius and Anthimus through the Middle Ages. Section two details the three sources the work is based on. The Viandier of Taillevent, The Menagier de Paris and Chiquart’s Du Fait De Cuisine – On cookery, are three of the most important early cookery books. The third section goes into Medieval Foods and Cookery – food stuffs and foods peculiar to Medieval France (Spices, colorants, sweeteners, fats and grease, grape products, etc.). The fourth section of the introduction, simply titled “Cookery”, includes discussions on chopping and grinding, binding agents and cooking techniques, as well as food supply and preservation in Medieval France. In the fourth section we are treated to an examination of beverages, including wines beers and ciders. The fifth section, Kitchens and their physical features, along with the utensils you will find in them is an interesting view into Medieval cookery. Next, in the sixth section, the Scully’s discuss the hall were foods were served and the banquets served in them. The seventh section outlines the roll of the cook and their assistants in the time period, and in the different social classes. And to complete out the Introduction we have a few pages on “Advice to the Newly Medieval Cook”. This section outlines things to take into consideration, authenticity and adaptations to mention two, when you are starting down the road of medieval culinary exploration.

The bulk of the book, almost 250 pages consisting of 10 chapters, are filled with recipes for you to cook. These 10 chapters are organized in an accessible and modern manner for ease of use.

In Chapter One, titled, Standard Preparations, you will find spice powders, almond milk, breads etc. that you will use in the many of the other recipes. Chapter Two consists of Appetizers; Chapter Three, is titled Sops and Soups. Chapter Four is completely dedicated to Sauces, a most important component to serve along-side the ubiquitous roast joint or roast poultry. Chapter five, six, seven, eight and nine are your modern style mains of meat, poultry, fish, egg and vegetable dishes. And to end the recipe chapters we have chapter ten, desserts. The totality of the book, with almost 100 recipes, not including variations, it is hard to choose one or two to highlight here. Instead of me recommending a recipe to try write me and let me know which ones you make. The final two parts of the book consist of a fairly comprehensive section on Menu Suggestions and Meals and an Appendix titled “A Day in the Life of Master Chiquart Amicz, Chef to the Duke of Savoy (1416 A.D.)” Both of these sections will widen your knowledge of Medieval French Cuisine.

Dr. Scully received his undergraduate degree in French from Oxford University. He received his Ph.D in French literature from Harvard.

His focus on French Medieval and Renaissance Food can be further explored in his first book “The Art of Cookery in the Middle Ages” and further investigated in “The Viandier of Taillevent” which is an academic, yet readable, comparison of all the existing manuscripts of Taillevent. He has also contributed to many academic journals, as well as being a guest speaker at numerous food and history conferences. Now retired from teaching Dr. Scully continues to research and write. Dr. D. Eleanor Scully is an art historian and scholar with a focus on Medieval and Renaissance Italian art of the 14th and 15th centuries. She holds a Ph.D from New York University in art history. J. David Scully is an artist who studied painting and illustration at the Rhode Island School of Design.

What is your SCA name?

Hlutwige Wolfkiller

How long have you been a scribe?

Well...I started learning calligraphy in Anno Societatis XVII. Not really sure how long I've been considered an actual "scribe"...or if I am a scribe.

How did you become a scribe?

Doing

What do you enjoy most about being a scribe?

Seeing the pleasure in people's faces who receive the work.

Have you ever held an office/position as a Scribe?

I *think* I may have been Baronial scribe at

Was there anyone that helped you along your scribal journey that you would like to acknowledge? If so, how did they influence you on this journey?

Asala Telerion, Maelen of Kingsley, Asha ap Myrddyn, Renart le fox, Jocelyn Crookhorn, Urracca...all influenced and inspired me in one way or another along the way. I am not confident that I could quantify any of it.

Do you have any special tips, tricks, or techniques that you use or have learned through your scribal journey?

Oh gods yes. Though, if I tell you, I'll have to dispose of you.

Have you ever done an original award? If so, what did you learn though the process? Do you have any advice you ## would pass on to someone new to original work?

I have done several. Every original is a learning experience thus, new discoveries happen every time. My advise? Dive in.

What is your favorite Kingdom Award that you have painted, calligraphed, or designed?

Why is that your favorite?

I worked with Dame Urracca on a Laurel scroll for Countess Morwyn. Unfortunately, I don't have a photo of it.

Keep on swimming.

Is there anything that you would say to your younger scribal self just starting out on this path?

Practice more...take better care of your eyes, hands and back.

Is there anything else that you would like to say or add as an An Tir Spotlight Scribe?

If you can't be good, be proficient.

some point...and have been Royal Scribe several times. There really was no such thing as Royal Scribe prior to the Charter System. It became necessary to have someone deal with that aspect of a reign once it took root. Royal Scribe can be hands on or hands off...mainly what is needed is an administrator who is capable of organizing artists (which can occasionally seem like herding cats) for charter and scroll creations, distributing charters and collecting them for finishing (if needed) and preparing them for delivery to the Crown. None of that means one must be a scribe to fulfill the position.

What is your scribal pet peeve?

It is preferable for a scribe/painter/calligrapher who wishes to sign their work to do so either on an attached bit of paper or along the edge of the charter/scroll. NOT behind the art or calligraphy.
