From Their Royal Majesties

Greetings unto Our populace!

We have been blessed by a lovely Coronation and it is glorious in Our eyes. We are incredibly grateful for Their Excellencies Tryggr and Mercedes for holding Our lands so steadfastly.

We are preparing for War! While Caid's numbers are few at Pennsic, they will be mighty and We are thankful to all of those who work so diligently on Our behalf to allow Us to attend. We will update you more fully in Our next missive.

Both Highland and GWW are on the horizon and We encourage you to both pre-reg and volunteer! Our court will be manning gate and porter on Thursday late afternoon at GWW and We know you will accept Our challenge of giving at least two hours of your time to the event.

We will be on both the rapier and the armored combat fields at both wars and are looking forward to it immensely. Remember, Sunday is Day of Heroes on the war field and We will represent at Highland! The Rose Tournament will be held on Sunday at GWW and We encourage you to join Us. If you would like to fight, but do not have a sponsor, please contact Her Grace Bridget to see if there are open slots.

Summer is here and there are events every weekend. We so look forward to getting to know you better. Remember: Come when you can, do what you can, and HAVE FUN!

Yours, In Service to the Dream

From the Kingdom Seneschal

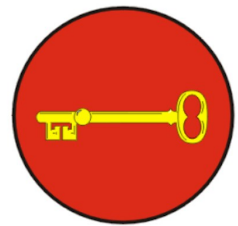

Greetings!

During the final court of Their Majesties Tryggr and Mercedes, the 19th edition of The Caidan Boke of Law was announced. The last time Kingdom Law was updated was back in 2018 and this latest edition brings us into compliance with the latest rules and rulings from Society. I encourage everyone to read the new Kingdom Law handbook. It is available for viewing and download from the kingdom website – sca-caid.org

During the process for updating Kingdom Law, Dame Grace O'Kenaith was instrumental in building and guiding the team to update and revise the document. A word of thanks to her and all those involved.

Next month is Crown Tournament and the call for letters will be published at the beginning of August. As a reminder, for those considering entering Crown Tournament, please be aware Privy Council returns to the day after the tournament. The victors of the day are required to attend Privy Council, so plan accordingly.

In Service,
Laertes
Kingdom Seneschal

From the Kingdom Chronicler

Hello Caid!

As the skies above us and the very soil below us begin their very real descent into the fiery destruction we know here on the mainland as “summer,” (yes, Western Seas, not you.) We are reminded to do all of the important things: stay hydrated, stay at a safe temperature, stay sheltered and/or protected from the very large, angry yellow ball in the sky, and enjoy milder weather whenever possible.

To that end, I remind folks that Pirate Tourney in Darach begins the month, and though many are still at Pennsic, it is always a jolly time. I also want to remind everyone that at the warmer locales for events this month (Starkhafn, Nordwache, Al-Sahid, and of course Her Majesty’s Festival of the Rose in Dun Or) there are such things as air conditioners. Let’s all go en masse to a charming little café with a rockin’ A/C unit and freak out the mundanes!

Thanks to all who have sent in articles and artwork. I am thankful for the glorious artistic bounty Caid provides. I just sent in our selections for the William Blackfox Awards for A.S. 58, and we should know sometime next year how we did. So, keep those submissions coming!

In Service to Kingdom and Society, I remain,
Beorn of the Northern Sea

Hellenistic Greek Cooking and Spice Trade

By Duke Wilhelm Skallagrimsson, KSCA

Food, a powerful agent of cultural transformation, has left its indelible mark on the annals of history. Ancient Greece, a beacon of intellectual prowess with its contributions to philosophy, art, and science, also boasted a rich culinary heritage and a thriving spice trade. The Greeks, with their meticulous attention to ingredient quality and culinary finesse, elevated their dishes to an art form. Spices, beyond their role as flavor enhancers, served as a conduit for cultural exchange, bridging the gap between civilizations.

The cuisine of ancient Greece primarily relied on local produce such as grains, vegetables, fruits, and meat. Grains like wheat and barley were staple foods that formed the base of many dishes. Vegetables such as olives, onions, garlic, legumes, and leafy greens were commonly consumed as part of meals or in salads. Olive oil, a cornerstone of ancient Greek cooking, was a testament to the country's bountiful Mediterranean climate. Its versatility was unmatched, serving as both a cooking medium and a dressing, infusing dishes with a distinct flavor and character. To prepare their meals, ancient Greeks employed various culinary techniques such as boiling, baking, roasting over an open fire or grill (known as spit-roasting), frying in olive oil or animal fat (known as shallow-frying), and stewing meats with vegetables to create rich flavors.

Ancient Greeks used utensils to cook, including pots made from clay or metal for boiling, pans made from bronze or copper for frying, spits made from wood or metal for roasting meat, griddles made from stone or metal for baking bread, sieves made from woven materials to strain liquids, mortars and pestles made from stone to grind spices, and knives made from iron to cut ingredients.

Spices played a crucial role in enhancing the flavors and aromas of ancient Greek dishes. Cumin, coriander, oregano, and thyme were the most used herbs. These spices added depth to the cuisine and provided medicinal properties. Cumin, for example, was valued for its digestive benefits and was often used in meat dishes as a flavor enhancer. Coriander brought a citrusy note to Greek foods and was believed to have medicinal properties that contributed to overall well-being. Oregano and thyme were frequently used as aromatic herbs in various recipes.

The spice trade routes during ancient times played a vital role in sourcing spices from different regions like India, Egypt, and Arabia. Cinnamon, black pepper, saffron, ginger, cardamom, and cloves arrived in Greece through these trade routes. Indian Ocean trade connected the Greeks with the Indian subcontinent, where they obtained valuable spices like black pepper, that enhanced their culinary offerings. The Egyptians provided access to aromatic herbs like coriander, which became integral to Greek cooking. The spice trade facilitated cultural exchange between different civilizations during ancient times. As Greek traders interacted with merchants from other regions along the spice routes, they discovered new flavors and ingredients that enriched their cuisine. This cultural exchange profoundly impacted ancient Greek cooking techniques as they incorporated new methods of preparing food influenced by other cultures they encountered along the spice trade routes.

Famous examples of dishes from ancient Greece include Moussaka—a layered casserole made with eggplant or potatoes, and Dolmades—stuffed grape leaves filled with rice or ground meat mixture. In addition to these savory dishes, sweet treats like Baklava—a pastry made with layers of filo dough filled with nuts and sweetened by honey syrup—were enjoyed by ancient Greeks.

These recipes highlight the diverse use of ingredients such as lamb, beef, and fish; vegetables like eggplant and onions; herbs like parsley and dill; and spices like cumin and coriander. Ancient Greek cuisine was known for its health benefits due to its emphasis on fresh produce and herbs. The Mediterranean diet followed by the Greeks included many fruits, vegetables, whole grains, nuts, legumes, and olive oil. These ingredients contributed to a diet rich in essential nutrients, including vitamins, minerals, antioxidants, and healthy fats, which were beneficial for cardiovascular health, digestion, and overall well-being.

In conclusion, ancient Greek cooking techniques and the spice trade profoundly impacted their culinary traditions. Using local produce and incorporating spices enhanced flavors and facilitated cultural exchange with other civilizations along the spice trade routes. Combining culinary techniques such as boiling, baking, and grilling alongside tools like clay pots, bronze pans, wooden spits, mortars, sieves, and knives created diverse dishes showcasing ancient Greek cooks' creativity. The cultural influences from the spice trade helped shape their cuisine into what it became—an exquisite blend of flavors that still resonates with modern palates. Ancient Greeks' focus on fresh produce, herbs, and olive oil contributed to a diet that offered numerous health benefits. Overall, Ancient Greek cooking is essential in understanding history through food culture.
