From Their Highnesses of Caid

Greetings to the Kingdom of Caid from Al-Caid and Lady Caid. We wanted to take this opportunity to introduce Ourselves for those members of the populace who do not know Us.

His Highness has been a citizen of Caid for 14 years, while Her Highness has been a Caidan for 7 years. From humble beginnings at His first Arts in the Park in 2009, through His knighting in 2017, to His role now as a staple spearman in Drafn Warband, His Highness has enjoyed training and refining His skills in heavy armored combat, but is interested in exploring rapier fighting in the future.

Her Highness has spent Her time since attending Her first Caid event at Potrero War building a loyal following for Her cooking skills and running the Greasy Wheel in the House of the Wandering Wheel, as well as taking shifts at the Wobbly Wheel as the Blue Fairy. She is known to occasionally sew cloaks, skirts, belt favors, and other odds and ends.

We look forward to getting to know everyone a little better during Our royal progress while We prepare for Coronation!

From the Kingdom Seneschal

Greetings!

Winter is officially just around the corner and the days will get darker earlier and earlier. November is a busy month with events, practices and the beginning of the holiday season. Be sure to carve some time out to be able to enjoy all the moments!

As you start to consider shopping for gifts, please keep in mind that the SCA has a program to gift an SCA membership to a friend or family member. Details can be found at: www.sca.org/news/gifting-an-sca-membership/

From the Kingdom Chronicler

Hello unto the populace of Caid!

Remember last month when I wished for an eventual cooling for our event times? Yeah, sorry that my wish didn't come true. Queen's Champion, Crown List, and even Great Western War were hotter than comfortable. But I have a good feeling about November!

As we waltz merrily into "Holiday Season" (which for my family starts on the first day of Autumn, continues through Halloween, Thanksgiving, Christmas and stops sometime after the New Year), please enjoy your final anniversaries of the year before we get ready for Yule season!

I once again remind you to write things: award letter recommendations, poems for Crown, missives to family; even your thoughts for the upcoming year. It is that time of year to reflect and prepare for celebration and joy!

In service to Crown, Coronet, and Society, I remain,
Beorn of the Northern Sea

Lorax Opus Foresters

By Fiachra an Doire

Unto the populace of Caid do I, Fiachra an Doire, send greetings and well wishes!

I pen this missive upon the request of Her Majesty, Lorissa du Griffin, Queen of Caid.

Great Western War was once again upon us, which makes this the ideal time to share some thoughts on responsible camping. We often think about how to make our camping experience as comfortable and convenient as possible, but how often do we think about our impact on the site? Let's take a look at how we can be better stewards of our site, to ensure that we have a beautiful location with lots of healthy shade trees to return to in the years to come.

- The trees -

In the tradition of the ancient druids, "I speak for the trees, for the trees have no tongues."

Ok, this quote has nothing to do with the druids. It's actually a quote from The Lorax, by Dr. Seuss, but it does drive the point home that trees cannot speak for themselves, so we must be cognizant of their needs.

First, let's talk about roots. A tree's roots not only provide support and structure, but they also supply trees with the water and nutrients they need to survive. Damaging roots, especially large structural roots, can cause the death of large portions of a tree, weakening it, making it less able to withstand high winds, and possibly leading to its eventual demise. At the very least, damaging roots leads to ugly scars, and we don't want to be responsible for creating an ugly park.

When setting up camp, it is very tempting to set up in the shade of a tree. This can definitely help keep your tent cooler, but please check for roots before setting up your tent. Avoid setting up your tent over tree roots whenever possible. Not only will you be helping the trees, but you'll also sleep better at night without the roots under your sleeping bag or bedroll. At the very least, please ensure you are not driving tent stakes into tree roots. This causes irreparable damage, as discussed above.

Next, let's look at trunks and branches. These comprise the above-ground portion of the tree, create shade, and hold the leaves that allow the tree to photosynthesize and create the energy it needs to survive, grow, and hopefully thrive.

Tree trunks and branches are fairly solid, and it is tempting to hang things from them or use them as anchor points for tents, canopies, or hammocks. Please don't. Not only is it against the rules in most parks, but again, it has the potential to damage or even kill the tree.

Third, let's look at water. Trees need water, and lots of it. Even our drought-tolerant and water-wise species need a relatively large amount of water to thrive.

Trees need water. Yes, I said that already. I'm repeating it because it's important.

Trees need water... not waste. Dishwater, hand washing water, and cooking water are waste, not water, and should not be dumped under trees or other plants. They contain dissolved matter and salts that can actually harm trees. Even if you are using the most natural, organic, chemical-free soap on earth, it's still not appropriate to dump under trees.

We all know that most of our kingdom is a desert, and it exists in a seemingly perpetual state of drought. But did you know that under these conditions, pouring waste water under a tree or plant can actually pull water OUT of it?! Through the process of osmosis, dissolved particles and salts are distributed evenly throughout the volume of the water. If the solids cannot move due to a barrier (such as the cellular membranes in a tree's root tips), the water will move instead. If there are enough dissolved materials and salts in your waste water, this can mean that water will actually move out of the tree's roots, back into the soil, and this can be very bad for the tree.

Remember, waste water is waste, not water. Put it down a drain, not under a tree.

If we want to have nice shade trees at future events, we need to take care of the trees at our CURRENT events.

- Fire safety -

Choose your fire location carefully. Keep 10 feet in every direction clear of tents, pop ups, large obstacles, vegetation, and trees. Every direction- including vertically. Don't set up your fire pit under a tree, inside a tent or pavilion, or under an awning, pop up, or shade. Make sure you have a fire extinguisher nearby and visible, and make sure the person responsible for the fire knows where it is and is comfortable using it if needed.

Be very, very careful with accelerants. If you are going to use lighter fluid, use a very small amount. Never use gasoline, kerosene, lantern fuel, aerosols, or any other accelerants to start your fire.

Instead of using lighter fluid, consider starting your fire the old fashioned way. You can use old natural fiber rope for tinder. Learn to make a feather stick. Dribble candle wax onto your kindling to help it catch. There are many methods to choose from. Fire starting can be a fascinating (and fun, in my opinion) part of our historical reenactment. In many ways, fire starting is both an art and a science.

Smaller fires are safer fires. Build the smallest fire possible to accomplish the task at hand. If you cannot comfortably pass your hand over the top of your fire pit while standing next to it, your fire is too big and too hot. Likewise, if you can't comfortably place your hand on the ground underneath your fire pit (because we're all making sure our fire pits are at least 12 inches off the ground, right?), it's too hot and probably too large. If the flames from your fire extend more than a foot above the rim of your fire pit, your fire is too large. If you have a large group circled around your fire for warmth, consider using multiple fire pits with smaller fires instead of one large fire that pushes the capacity and safety of your fire pit. Likewise, if you are cooking for a large group, consider using multiple fire pits instead of overloading a single pit.

Make sure your fires are fully extinguished when you are done with them. What is defined as "fully extinguished" varies from site to site, but here are three good guidelines.

- If you can add fresh, dry tinder to your fire pit without it igniting, your fire is fully extinguished.
- If your coals have been completely saturated with water, your fire is fully extinguished.
- If your coals are cool enough to touch, your fire is fully extinguished. Be careful if checking using this method.

There is absolutely no harm in using two, or even all three, of these methods together. Douse the fire with water first, then toss some tinder on it. Wait a few seconds, and if the tinder hasn't caught fire, do a careful touch test. Warm is okay, hot is not.

Coals and ash should be disposed of in the appropriate bin, and not in the regular trash. Nobody likes a dumpster fire.

If you have any questions or concerns about fire safety, or would like to learn some historical techniques, tips, and tricks to get a fire going, reach out to me, or another member of the Foresters Guild. Fire starting is one of the essential outdoor skills we teach our members.

Since most of our events here in Caid happen in parks, fire wood should be purchased, not collected. Collecting wood in most parks is illegal. Purchasing your firewood close to the event site reduces the chances of accidentally transporting insects, fungus, or other pests and diseases from one area to another. Again, with our perpetually drought- stressed trees, it doesn't take much to push them from struggling to dying.

If you are camping in an area that allows the collection of firewood, please collect it responsibly. Only collect wood that has fallen. Don't knock over dead trees that are still standing, and don't remove branches - even dead ones - from live trees.

When you are searching for firewood in the forest, and you have confirmed that collection is legal, look for trunks and branches that are no bigger around than your forearm, and are short enough to be transported back to your camp easily. If you need to reduce the length of the dead wood down to a manageable size, do so quickly and efficiently by breaking it. If you can't break it, don't take it. We're building a fire, not a cabin.

Avoid rotten, punky, soft wood. It does not burn well, and decomposing wood is an integral part of the forest environment and food chain.

- Trash -

This one will be brief. We should all know what to do with our trash. If you packed it in, make sure it gets packed out. Make sure your camp has at least one trash can or bag, and use it. This includes food waste. It may be "natural," but it's not necessarily good for the environment. Make sure your trash gets sorted as required by local/site rules and regulations. If you see trash outside your camp, or in a public area, pick it up if you are able to. The more trash we each put into appropriate receptacles, the less trash the clean up crew has to deal with after the event.

And remember, waste water is waste, not water. Put it down a drain, not under a tree.

- Closing thoughts -

We are fortunate to have beautiful sites with ample shade for the vast majority of our events. We cannot take these sites, their beauty, or the shade for granted. We must do what we can to keep our sites beautiful and our shade trees healthy. Each of us need only make small adjustments. Collectively, these will add up to big changes.

I was looking forward to the Great Western War. It's a fantastic event, and the weather was looking like it might be a little bit cooler.

Again, if anyone has concerns about fire safety, or wants to ensure that your camp setup is respectful of the trees and their root systems, please reach out.

I can be reached by email at fiachra.an.doire@gmail.com. I am very easy to find on Facebook.
